WITH THE LYRICS.

Plotow's Masterpiece Martha Reddered Before a Large Audience.

"Martha" is one of the most beautiful romantic operas composed by a Master in the days when people preferred Plotow to Offenbach and Schubert to a "nigger song." The sweet songs of the famous opera were rendered at the Opera House last evening by the Boston Lyric Opera Company in a most delightful manner.

Miss Leekley, whose excellent voice has frequently been mentioned in our columns had her grand "finishing." Her acting was superb and rarely has "Nancy" been represented on the stage with more "chic" and vivacity than Miss Leekley did last evening.

She was well supported by Mr. Rockwell, who made a splendid "Plunkett" and whose rich baritone was heard to great advantage. His acting was highly appreciated by the audience which filled every seat in the house.

A. L. Parmeley as "Lionel" was at home, and nobody who has heard him in his parts in the operas played during the season would have imagined for a moment that he is the possessor of such a powerful tenor carefully cultivated and modulated in a truly artistic manner. Parmeley is evidently a young man yet and he appears occasionally somewhat stiff on the stage. His acting as a whole was fine and the young singer has certainly a bright future before him in the world of music.

Why "Martha" was selected as the opera in which Miss Andrews was to make her debut we do not know. Her voice is excellent, of course, but Miss Andrews undoubtedly belongs in the grand opera and not in a semi-comic opera like Martha. It will be a treat to hear her in "Il Trovatore" and works of similar classical standing. Martha is not exactly within her sphere although she played and sang her part in a very satisfactory manner to all—with the exception perhaps of herself.

Kunkle and Henderson were as amusing as ever and the chorus did their work in a masterly manner.

To-morrow "The Pirates of Penzance" will be given at the matinee, and in the evening "Olivette" will be performed.

We have suggested before to the good people of Honolulu that "encores" are always in bad form in a theater where a first-class play is produced. But it is even more so at the performance of an opera. The part of the audience which desires to follow the play does not care to lose the key by having scenes and songs repeated, and we are sure that the singers are not over anxious to strain their voices by responding to the calls for "encores" by those who think they must get the most out of their money. The romantic impression which should be created by the production of an opera like Martha is marred by having the poor crazy Lionel cease his acting while repeating his sad song. Imagine in a grand opera, a hero singing his best song before he is killed on the stage and in response to an encore get on his feet again, repeat the song and die some more. In civilized countries first class artists make no response to the applause of the audience or the claque and we ought soon to become civilized. The audience has a right to make a noise in expressing its opinion as long as the other "fellow" or the singers and actors are not annoyed.
